

THE COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY WRITING PROJECT INVITES YOU TO ATTEND THE

NWP ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGIONAL CONFERENCE

Mind, Body, and Soul:

Finding Your Path toward Sustainable Teaching

If you still love the profession of education deep down, but just don't know how much longer you can last in it, this is the conference for you. Hosted by the Colorado State University Writing Project, the conference will be devoted to helping you nourish your mind, body, and soul as an educator by giving you space and time for professional renewal and personal restoration in community.

Come and explore the concept of sustainable teaching, and learn mindfulness and resiliency practices that will help you stay in the profession for the long haul!

JUNE 12-14, 2020

on the Colorado State University campus in beautiful Fort Collins, Colorado

WHAT IS SUSTAINABLE TEACHING?

Sustainable teaching is the process of fostering self-compassion and renewal in educators who support the growth and development of students in turn. Sustainable teaching puts educators first with the goal of creating a collaborative community that values an integrated approach to education and enables all participants to thrive.

For more information regarding registration and conference proposal submissions, visit: nwprmrc.com.